

CONTENTS

As its title suggests, this book does three things: (1) It describes the discourse about Paul's trance and other modes of cognizing God through key questions raised by early thirteenth-century theologians; (2) It discusses the perceptions of the self implied by this discourse; (3) It suggests these questions resonate concerns of theologians regarding the nature of their academic profession. Each chapter, therefore, has accordingly three titles.

Introduction / 1

- 1 Why was Paul ignorant of his own state, and how do various modes of cognizing God differ? / 23
The experiencing self and the observing self / 23
Theology among other modes of cognizing God / 23
- 2 How could Paul remember his rapture? / 59
Memory and the continuity of the self / 59
Theology between experience and words / 59
- 3 Can a soul see God or itself without intermediaries? / 81
The self as distinct from its habits and actions / 81
Theology between experience and observation / 81
- 4 Does true faith rely on anything external? / 111
The self as an ultimate source of authority / 111
Theology between internal and external authority / 111
- 5 What happens to old modes of cognition when new ones are introduced during trance and other transitions? / 135
The self and its ability to manipulate parts of it during transitions / 135
Theology between reasoned knowledge and simple faith / 135

viii CONTENTS

6 Can knowledge qua knowledge be a virtue? / 158

The self in society / 158

Theology between theory and practice / 158

Summary and Epilogue / 189

Appendix / 199

Acknowledgments / 205

Notes / 207

Bibliography / 265

Index / 000